and the Underworld where the deities of darkness dwell, who are exerting all their power to gain control of these two worlds.

Within this world reside three separate worlds. The Skyworld where the deities reside, the world of the mortals where we humans live

You're
coming

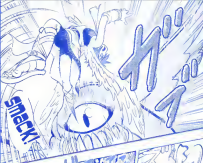

Everyone,
are you
all okay?

The
great
angel
has come
to rescue
us—!

It's
great
angel!

Oh, I hope will Though your face certainly may
be annoying,
I hope a plan to make you to
cut your spy

...

But the tower's
all full of
monsters!

If I lose the tower,
he shows the people will...

Overlooked that beast
and some the tower!

That's right.
We'll manage it somehow!

Even if we
lose the tower...

Can
a great
angel!

I'll make sure that I
destroy the monster and
return, but
until then
you've got to hold out!

Understood!
Thank
you,
everyone!

Hey,
great angel!
Wouldn't it
be faster if you
just fly
yourself
to it?

I just know that the great angel
is going
to win
against
that threat!

the air!

Don't you get it?!
That
weapon
of yours
has no

on us!

You can breathe fire?
That's not fair!

Pit!

Oh!
You used the statue
as a shield!

Now everyone
can see that!
What are you
trying to escape by flying away?

Shut
up!

I'll burn
down most
of those statues until
all are nothing

(Translator's notes)

There's a double meaning going on in Pil's dialogue: What he says in Japanese is ボク未熟な天使なんで空飛べないんです. 未熟な (misukana) means fledgling, as in inexperienced or not yet ready. What he probably meant was that since he is still so young, he isn't able to fly (yet), what the townsfolk most likely heard is him admitting that he's an inexperienced fighter, so their expectations crash when they assume that he's going to get himself killed due to lack of battle experience.
